Riding Toward the Future

Once upon a time, there was a boy, a horse, and an enchanted forest. The boy loved going on adventures with his horse, who was his best friend. One day, they decided to go farther into the forest than usual. As they walked, they saw something shiny between the trees. It was a magical portal with beautiful colors. The boy and the horse entered it.

Suddenly, they found themselves in a very strange place. The forest was full of plants with strange colors, and the trees had lights like those at Christmas. They realized they had traveled to the future.

As they explored this new world, they encountered a girl.

"Who are you?" the boy asked.

"I'm your sister!" she said with a big smile. "Where have you been all this time? I've missed you so much."

The boy didn't understand much, but he was happy to see his sister. She took him to a house full of incredible things: there were machines floating in the air, talking screens, and robots that helped with everything. The boy was amazed. While they were playing with one of the robots, they accidentally pressed a button that opened another portal in the floor. Suddenly, smoke started coming out of the portal, and strange sounds could be heard.

"Oh no!" said the sister. "We've activated another time portal!"

The boy and his sister decided to investigate and jumped into the portal, riding on the horse. The portal took them back to the enchanted forest, but it was different. The trees reached up to the clouds, and the flowers kept changing colors. There were strange animals, and many horses could fly. As they walked, they met a cat who, to their surprise, started talking.

"Hello! I'm a robot cat," said the cat in a robotic voice. "I can help you get back home, but first we need to find the time hacker."

The boy and his sister followed the robot cat through the forest until they reached a cave full of screens and wires. There, they met a strange man with enormous glasses and wild, messy hair. He was the time hacker, a very smart man who knew a lot about portals, but also liked to play tricks.

"Hello. I've been expecting your visit. It seems you've been playing with my portals," said the hacker.

The boy, his sister, and the horse were a bit nervous, but the hacker didn't seem bad. He explained that the portals were very powerful and could take them to any place and time. Then, the hacker showed them another portal, one he had created himself, that would take them to the past, right to the moment when they were born.

"But be careful," the hacker warned. "If you meet your past selves, you could cause a big mess in time."

The boy and his sister nodded, and together with the horse, they entered the portal. On the other side, they found themselves in a small village in front of a house that looked very familiar. It was the house where they lived when they were little. From a window, they saw their young parents holding two babies: it was them!

They tried to get closer without making a sound, but suddenly, the horse neighed and drew attention. The babies started crying, and their parents looked toward the window.

Quickly, the boy, his sister, and the horse ran back to the portal before anyone could see them. Back in the enchanted forest of the future, the hacker was waiting for them.

"You almost messed up and got caught," said the hacker. "I hope you've learned an important lesson about time travel and my portals."

The hacker then helped them open a portal to return to their real time. Happy, the boy and his horse said goodbye to the sister from the future and crossed the portal once more. On the other side, they found themselves back in the enchanted forest, but now everything was just as it had been before.

"What an adventure," said the boy, patting the horse. "We need to go home."

Together, they walked back to their home, happy to have experienced such an incredible adventure. Even though the adventure in the future and the past had ended, they knew they would always remember the magic of the portals and the amazing things they had seen.

They returned home, knowing that the magical portals could take them to incredible places and times, but it was dangerous to use them. At home, their sister was playing. The boy looked at her with a smile because he remembered her in the future, full of joy and technology. The boy kept the memory of his journey as a special secret, knowing that the future would always be full of amazing things to discover.

A. Nadales María